MEZCAL

SOME BACANORA, RAICILLA & SOTOL, TOO

Historically, all agave spirits were known as mezcal (including Tequila). That changed in 1994 when Mezcal formally became its own Denomination of Origin. Mezcal can be made from almost 40 different species of agave and is certified in 10 states: Oaxaca, Guerrero, Michoacán, Puebla, Zacatecas, Guanajuato, San Luis Potosí, Tamaulipas, Durango and most recently Sinaloa! Most Mezcals are made by cooking the agave with wood and while some Mezcals are smokey, many others are not. Almost all mezcal is traditionally unaged, or "joven." The following spirits (Mezcal, Bacanora, Raicilla, and Sotol) are organized by the different plants from which they are made.

TEQUILA

Tequila is produced in the states of Jalisco, Guanajuato, Michoacán, Nayarit, and Tamaulipas. It is made from the BLUE WEBER agave plant, native to these regions. The production process starts by harvesting the mature agave plants and removing their spiky leaves. The core (known as the piña) is then roasted, crushed, fermented, and distilled. The final product is a flavorful spirit which showcases the distinctive characteristics of the region in which it was crafted. It may or may not be aged in oak barrels. Aging time in the barrel is denoted by:

BLANCO
0-60 days

REPOSADO
2 months-364 days

AÑEJO
1-3 years

EXTRA AÑEJO
3+ years

JALISCO - LOS ALTOS

These tequilas are made in high elevations, averaging 7,500 feet above sea level. The high clay soil or Tierra Roja is also rich in iron which gives the agave plant a higher-stress growing environment. These growing conditions result in sweeter, fruitier with more floral tequila with herbal notes.

JALISCO - EL VALLE

These tequilas are made in lower elevations in the valleys of Jalisco. The mineral rich soil or Volcán de Tequila comes from an inactive volcano. This gives the agaves plenty of nutrient rich soil to grow from. These growing conditions result in tequila that is earthier and more peppery with vegetal and stone notes.

GUANAJUATO

Similar to the Jalisco highlands, the agaves in this region are grown in rocky and mineral rich soil. Cool temperatures and high altitude cause these agaves to mature slowly giving the tequila sweet and fruity notes with long finishes.
